

Third Symposium: Reducing inequalities in cancer and cancer screening in people with intellectual disabilities

The Third Symposium: Reducing inequalities in cancer and cancer screening in people with intellectual disabilities will take place on 13th – 15th June 2022. This webinar will be on-line and based on UK time.

The aim of the symposium is to share good practice in cancer care and cancer screening in people with intellectual disabilities across the following themes:

- Medical and genetic aspects of cancer in people with intellectual disability
- Supporting people with intellectual disability through the cancer journey
- Perspectives on cancer screening

The Third Symposium will bring together leading and influential researchers who have worked in the area for many years, alongside new emerging researchers and practitioners who are developing work to enhance the care and experience of people with intellectual disabilities and those who support them. Please see website for more details.

The symposium is brought to you by Edinburgh Napier University in-conjunction with the East of Scotland Learning Disability Managed Care Network, Family Advice and Information Resource (FAiR) and NHS Lothian Screening and Early Detection team, Public Health and Health Policy.

By registering for this webinar, you consent to your personal data being shared with other participants and to receive future communications from Edinburgh Napier University in relation to events relevant to the Third Symposium.
